Executive Summary

I am currently a biomechanist and sport scientist at Driveline Baseball in Seattle, Washington, USA. My main duties include incorporating player, coach, and trainer feedback to streamline and scale how Driveline collects, analyzes, and acts on biomechanics data. Apart from interfacing with trainers and other R&D staff, I spend most of my time in Python, SQL, and Visual3D.

Before Driveline, I completed my masters and doctoral training at Auburn University in Auburn, Alabama, USA where I assisted with motion capture data collections in the Sports Medicine and Movement Laboratory and contributed to numerous projects examining the interplay between mechanics, performance, and injury risk in youth baseball and softball players.

My research interests include modeling skill and technique changes over time, energetic analysis of sporting movements, and improving methodological and statistical rigor in sports science research.

I have experience with several motion capture hardware and software solutions (Optitrak + Motive, Vicon + Nexus, Flock of Birds, TheMotionMonitor, and Visual3D) as well as electromyography (Delsys & Noraxon) and force plate (Bertec) data analysis. I also have varying proficiency levels in other software platforms related to data processing, visualization, and analysis such as R, MATLAB, and SPSS.

I am originally from Spring Lake, Michigan and am a former NCAA Division III baseball pitcher and pitching coach at Calvin University (Grand Rapids, Michigan). In my free time I enjoy reading, camping/backpacking, riding my bike, lifting weights, golfing, listening to/playing music, and sampling the occasional whiskey/bourbon flight.

Education

- 2021 Doctor of Philosophy; Kinesiology
 Auburn University; Auburn, Alabama, USA
 Dissertation: The Effect of Intensity on Overhead Throwing Mechanics: Implications for Throwing Rehabilitation
 Advisors: Gretchen Oliver (chair); Wendi Weimar, David Shannon, William Murrah
- 2018 Master of Science; Exercise Science
 Biomechanics Emphasis
 Auburn University; Auburn, Alabama, USA
- 2016 Bachelor of Arts; Exercise Science
 Pre-professional Emphasis
 Calvin University; Grand Rapids, Michigan, USA

Employment

- 2021 – Present Sport Scientist II
 Driveline Baseball
 Kent, Washington, USA
- 2018 – 2021 Graduate Teaching Assistant
 Undergraduate Research Mentor
 Auburn University
 Auburn, Alabama, USA
- 2016 – 17 Assistant Baseball Coach
 Pitching Coordinator
 Calvin University
 Grand Rapids, Michigan, USA
- 2016 – 17 Head Strength and Conditioning Coach
 Hofbauer Performance
 Byron Center, Michigan, USA

Research Statement

My research lives at the intersection of motion analysis, statistical methodology, and data visualization. Using these tools, I hope to improve understanding of the associations between movement technique, workload, performance, and injury in overhead athletic populations. To improve our understanding of these complex, real-world relationships, I have gained experience in many different motion analysis technologies as well as statistical software solutions. I have experience in both electromagnetic and passive optical motion capture as well as electromyography and force plates. To help process and analyze the biomechanical data obtained from these technologies, I have attained varying levels of proficiency in several software platforms such as The MotionMonitor xGen, Optitrak Motive, Vicon Nexus, MATLAB, RStudio, SPSS, Python, and Mplus.

My research started by examining the associations between baseball pitching mechanics and clinical assessment outcomes to connect what clinicians learn from movement assessments with what researchers learn from lab-based biomechanical analyses. I then became interested in biomechanical and statistical methodology and have since published several manuscripts bringing new analysis techniques to baseball and softball biomechanics research. In 2020, I published a paper using statistical parametric mapping to examine differences in pelvis and trunk mechanics between youth and collegiate softball pitchers. Then, earlier this year, I published a paper using energy flow analysis to examine the energetic demands placed on the shoulder and elbow during the baseball pitch. These two papers showcased research techniques previously unused in the field (in one case statistical; in the other case biomechanical). Moving forward, I hope to expand on the insights gained from using alternative statistical and biomechanical approaches and further emphasize the need for more rigorous statistical analyses in the sport sciences.

In my time with the Sports Medicine and Movement Laboratory I have published 14 manuscripts in refereed journals including 5 first author and 6 second author papers. In addition to manuscripts, I have written or help write over 30 conference abstracts and presented many of those abstracts at regional and national conferences. In 2020 and 2021, I was awarded the Foundation Scholarship by the National Strength and Conditioning Association; one of several awards given to graduate students around the United States for furthering the strength and conditioning profession through their studies and research.

Teaching Experience

Key: DEPARTMENT Class# – Class Title (credit hours) (semesters of experience)

KINE = Kinesiology

PHED = Physical Education

KINE 1103 – Wellness (2 credit hours) (2 semesters)

- Basic concepts and principles of wellness with laboratory experiences for the self-appraisal of health-related physical fitness.

KINE 3621 – Biomechanics of Human Movement Laboratory (1 credit hour) (5 semesters)

- Laboratory experience focuses on application of knowledge of anatomical, neuromuscular, and biomechanical principles of human movement. Content emphasizes understanding the science of exercise, how to apply and interpret common mechanical measures, and writing about findings using basic scientific writing techniques.

KINE 4403 – Applied Anatomy for the Allied Health Professional (3 credit hours) (2 semesters)

- Study of skeletal anatomy with an applied approach.

KINE 4560 – Sport Technique and Movement Analysis (3 credit hours) (1 semester)

- Skills and knowledge for observing, evaluating, and correcting movement patterns.

KINE 4880 – Training and Conditioning Programming (3 credit hours) (3 semesters)

- Skills and knowledge related to sport specific annual training regimens.

PHED 1383 – Kettlebell Training (2 credit hours) (1 semester)

- Introductory approach to kettlebell techniques and kettlebell program development.
